Says Mullane Had More Speed Than W. Johnson

Did Tony Mullane have more speed than Amos Rusle and Walter Johnson? Was the Apollo of the Cincinnati Club the fastest pitcher of all time? So thinks a good old fan, one who watched the Reds of 1869, and watched them come and go ever since. Says the fan: I've looked at them all, and I shall always think that Tony Mullane had more speed than Rusie ever snowed.'

than Rusie ever showed."
Unquestionably, Mullane had great speed in his earlier years, and ranked well up with the fastest men of Hurling Hill. It will be hard, however, to convince most fans of Rusie's day that Tony, or any other pitcher, had the cannonball force that Rusie usel to wield. Name ten "fastest pitchers," and Muliane would be among the ten; name the two fastest, and Rusie and Johnson would get the call; name one alone, and the debate as to the relative supremacy of Rusie and Johnson would begin all of Rusie and Johnson would begin all
